

Under the rules and precedents of the House, the Committee on House Administration has responsibility for congressional security matters, including ongoing oversight of the House Sergeant-at-Arms and the U.S. Capitol Police. Thus, the Subcommittee on Capitol Security's overall mission is to ensure that the people's representatives can discharge their congressional duties in a safe and secure environment also open to the millions of Americans and others who wish to visit the Capitol to lobby for or against their favorite legislation or simply to see Congress in action.
